

Brexit and Free Trade with the world

Extract of Global Britain press release

On Brexit, the UK declares free trade with the whole world and abolishes UK customs duties on its imports from all countries.

The Starting Scenario

1. Currently, as a member of the EU Customs Union, UK-EU trade (imports from and exports to other EU countries) is free of customs duties. At present, the UK's imports from the rest of the EU bear zero customs duties on entry into the UK.

2. In contrast, UK trade with countries outside the EU is currently "unfree". As a member of the EU Customs Union, the UK has to apply and collect EU customs duties on its imports from outside the EU.

3. Those customs duties belong to the EU, not to the UK. HMRC merely collects them on behalf of the EU, then transfers them to Brussels as part of the annual UK Gross Contribution to the EU. Those EU customs duties are a tax, payable by UK consumers, on UK imports from the world-outside-the-EU ("Rest of World": RoW).

4. On Brexit, and UK exit from the EU Customs Union, the UK, in line with its new "global free trade" stance, decides unilaterally to import from the RoW without imposing UK customs duties on such imports.

5. On Brexit, the UK, in line with its new "global free trade" stance, decides unilaterally to continue to import from "remaining EU" – the EU less the UK - without imposing UK customs duties on such imports.

6. UK imports from the whole world – the remaining EU plus RoW - are now free of UK customs duties.

7. On Brexit, the UK invites Brussels to reciprocate and continue to allow UK exports to enter EU member-states free of EU customs duties.

8. On Brexit, the UK resumes its seat and vote at the World Trade Organisation ("WTO"), both of which it surrendered to the EU on accession in 1973.

9. On Brexit, the UK has no direct legal power to insist that its exports to the remaining EU continue to be free of EU customs duties (though the UK may be able to influence the remaining EU through the WTO). It is assumed in this note that, post-Brexit, the remaining EU imposes customs duties on its imports from the UK.

Consequences for UK trade and the UK economy post-Brexit

UK Imports

10. British imports from RoW become cheaper than they were pre-Brexit, because, post-Brexit, such imports no longer bear EU customs duties.

11. Since the UK now imports from the entire world without imposing customs duties, UK importers, and HMRC, no longer have to apply "rules of origin", whose purpose was to determine which imported products were subject to customs duties and at what rate. A significant administrative burden is completely removed and the British economy as a whole benefits.

[In addition – though not immediately – the heavy EU regulatory burden (upwards of four per cent of UK GDP per year) is removed from the UK domestic economy. The British economy as a whole benefits.]

12. Because their "inputs" from RoW (though not from the remaining EU) are now cheaper, and the "rules of origin" administrative burden has disappeared, British-based manufacturers reduce the cost of their outputs and/or increase their profit margins. The UK economy becomes more attractive post-Brexit than it was pre-Brexit.

13. Post-Brexit, British imports from the remaining EU continue to enter the UK free of customs duties, as they did pre-Brexit (see 5 above).

14. But, assuming the remaining EU imposes EU customs duties on its imports from the UK, such imports will cost more to EU customers than they did pre-Brexit. Over time, (unless UK exporters lower their prices), the value of UK exports going to the remaining EU will shrink.

15. Consequently, the ongoing secular shrinkage in the proportion (currently around two-fifths) of UK global exports going to the remaining EU will accelerate.

16. The economy of the remaining EU becomes less attractive than it was pre-Brexit, since imports from the UK

Brexit and Free Trade with the world

are more expensive (because they now bear EU customs duties). (On the other hand, to the extent that the UK economy improves post-Brexit, that of the remaining EU will benefit from increased exports to the UK.)

17. Post-Brexit, inward Foreign Direct Investment (“FDI”) into the UK will increase, because (see 12 previously) the post-Brexit UK economy is economically more attractive than it was pre-Brexit. Some of that FDI may be diverted from the remaining EU, whose economy has become less attractive post-Brexit.

UK Exports

A. Post-Brexit the UK continues to trade freely under the WTO umbrella with countries such as the USA, China, Japan and many others which have never had Free Trade Agreements (“FTAs”) with the EU.

B. On Brexit, the provisions of an FTA between the EU and a non-EU country will, in theory, cease to apply to the UK. It will be up to the UK to negotiate bilaterally with the non-EU country a short-term “grandfathering” arrangement (extending the provisions of the former FTA with the EU), followed by better tariff-free trading arrangement tailored to UK requirements.

C. The UK, having declared & implemented free trade with the whole world and abolished all import duties, and having resumed its influential role, seat and vote at the WTO, invites those jurisdictions (including the remaining EU) which still impose customs duties on their imports from the UK to abolish such duties. The UK is already a signatory to numerous multilateral trade agreements and two plurilateral agreements negotiated between WTO members.

In this note, for the sake of simplicity, “imports” & “exports” are assumed to comprise “goods”, “services”, “income” & “transfers”. Customs duties are only chargeable on “goods”. However, flows of goods, services & income are often associated (e.g. Rolls Royce exports an aero-engine to a US airline, which counts as an export of goods; income earned by Rolls from subsequent maintenance of that engine counts as an export of services; & profit remitted from Rolls’

US subsidiary counts as “income” in the UK national accounts).

UK exports to RoW are already a third BIGGER than exports to EU-27. (See below) Given the long term differential rates of growth of UK exports to RoW and of UK exports to EU-27, the proportion of UK exports going to RoW is likely to increase further, and the proportion going to EU-27 is likely to shrink further.

UK Exports of Goods, Services, Income, Transfers in 2014

To EU-27	£289 bn	43%
To RoW	£390 bn	57%
To World	£679 bn	100%

*(57 minus 43 equals 14;
14 divided by 43 equals 33%)*

UK Imports of Goods, Services, Income, Transfers in 2014

From EU-27	£396 bn	51%
From RoW	£376 bn	49%
From World	£772 bn	100%

Cameron’s trickery exposed

The independent Labour Peer, Lord Stoddart of Swindon has taken exception to David Cameron’s eulogising Her Majesty the Queen on the sovereign’s 90th birthday, while he is simultaneously leading a campaign to abolish Britain as a nation state.

Lord Stoddart said: “It is the most nauseating hypocrisy for the Prime Minister and other political leaders to eulogise Her Majesty on the occasion of Her 90th birthday while, simultaneously, organising a national and international lobby to bounce the British people into voting to remain in the European Union at the referendum on 23rd June. This is an organisation, whose policy it is to abolish nation states, including Her Majesty’s own realm.

“They have already made Her Majesty a citizen of the European Union without consulting her. Anyone with genuine respect for the Queen should vote to leave, which will protect her and our country from the EU’s aggressive empire building.” [Source: Twitter release 22nd April]

Responding to Barack Obama’s comments, Lord Stoddart said: “First, we had the spectacle of a British Prime Minister going on bended knee to the German Chancellor begging for her help in conning the British people into remaining in the European Union. Now we see him toadying up to Obama, who is reviled and detested by so many in his own country, while he threatens the British people with dire consequences if they dare to vote for freedom and independence by leaving the EU. It is the worst kind of bullying and blackmail from a President who will be out of office in a little over six months. No British Prime Minister should have sanctioned this disgraceful treatment of British voters, never mind actively supported it!

“What this blundering intervention has done is confirm exactly what the ‘special relationship’ really means. ‘Do as we say or you will be punished.’ That is the status of a satellite – not of a partnership and the British people, as citizens proud of their country and its thousand year history, should give Obama his answer by voting for Brexit on 23rd June.” [Source: Twitter release 25th April]

The Whitehall report that proves EU's control on Britain and migrants

A document released by civil servants on Thursday 14th April has confirmed that the Government cannot block EU migrants from “rights to enter, live and work” in the UK.

It detailed how Britain has an “obligation to comply” with all EU laws, making clear the Charter of Fundamental Rights is “binding” on all 28 member nations.

The report on the “Rights and obligations of EU membership” was the last in a series of documents which the Government was legally required to publish in time for the official start of the referendum campaign.

But unlike previous publications in the series, the 96-page dossier appeared without fanfare, being released quietly on a Government website and announced with a written statement to MPs.

Matthew Elliott, chief executive of the Vote Leave campaign group, said: “It’s shocking that the Government has cynically buried its own report because it admits how much control we’ve handed to the EU.

“On top of leaving EU judges in control of our borders, our economy and even those who can vote in our democracy, we hand Brussels £350 million every week.”

The clause say Vote Leave is an admission the EU charter – which covers a range of social and employments rights – does apply in the UK.

Senior Tory MP Bill Cash, chairman of the Commons European Scrutiny Committee, said: “The Government is failing to tell the truth about the undemocratic basis of the working of the EU and its impact on everybody’s lives in the UK.

“So many decisions are taken behind closed doors in Brussels and then pushed through Parliament, affecting our lives on a daily basis.”

Previous reports – on the process of withdrawing from the EU, possible alternatives to EU membership and the UK’s supposed “special status” – were widely publicised on release.

This final report, however, sets out in stark detail the full force of Brussels law as it is applied to the UK.

“Directives set out a legal framework that the member states have to follow,” it says. “Once an EU directive has been agreed all member states have an obligation to make national laws that give it effect.”

It also says: “EU fundamental rights are binding on member states when they act within the scope of EU law.”

David Cameron has previously claimed Britain could opt out. The report also undermined the Prime Minister’s promise to ban EU jobseekers from the UK unless they have a specific offer of employment.

“EU law gives all other EU nationals rights to enter, live and work in another member state as well as their family members and dependents,” the document said.

A reminder of history

Can we learn anything from those who have spoken out about the EU in the past?

Speaking in the Hague in May 1992, Mrs Thatcher said; “Our choice is clear. Either we exercise democratic control of Europe through cooperation between national governments and parliaments which have legitimacy, experience and closeness to the people. Or we transfer decisions to a remote multilingual parliament, accountable to no real European public opinion and thus increasingly subordinate to a powerful bureaucracy”.

In an article in The European, in May just before the 2nd reading of the Maastricht Bill she wrote; “Real progress comes not from more bureaucracy, but from the values and institutions of government by consent, through ministers seen to be accountable. These things are in tune with the instincts of the people. They are part of the heritage we have built up over the centuries”.

Enoch Powell speaking June 1973 said; “Independence, the freedom of a self-governing nation, is in my estimation the highest political good, for which any disadvantage, if need be, and any sacrifice are a cheap price. There is not a state in Africa or Asia, hewn out of some administrative unit of Western colonial rule, which would not scorn to bargain away its independence...It is for us, and us alone, to determine if we will continue to be a free, self-governing people. I refuse to imagine we shall answer no”.

Tony Benn Labour’s Secretary of state for Industry writing in his diary in April 1974 after a meeting with George Thomas, an EEC Commissioner regarding the Common Market wrote; ‘I have never been on an explicitly anti-Market platform in my life but since we had been in the Community, I felt the House of Commons had become a spectator of great events, and that too much power had been drained away to Europe through all the official committees that had been set up’.

Harold Wilson the Leader of the Labour Party (1974) wrote in his memoirs on Europe; ‘In all my thirteen years as Leader of the Party I had no more difficult task than keeping the Party together on this issue’.

A rebuff to the Government's propaganda leaflet

Extract of an article by Michael Shrimpton in "Veterans Today" 13th April in response to the governments (tax-payers') £9 million pro-EU leaflet

The leaflet starts by claiming that the British Government believes that voting to remain is "the best decision for the UK". What the government really mean is that a vote to remain is in the best interests of Germany.

The UK is Germany's third biggest export customer and exports count for about half the German economy. The UK is the EU's most important export customer and absorbs surplus European labour by the million, at the expense of British workers.

On page 2 the leaflet makes the outrageous claim that the UK has secured a "special status" in a "reformed EU". This is a classic example of a 'Big Lie' propaganda technique. If you're going to lie to the public, lie big.

The claim is worthless. The Treaty on European Union has not been amended. If the UK votes to remain in the German orbit on June 23rd, the treaty will be applied against the UK in full measure. Since it has not been ratified by a single EU Member State, the deal Cameron struck is not legally binding in any event.

The "special status" claim is a reworked version of the lie fed to the British public before entry and during the last vote to leave, in 1975, to the effect that the EEC was just a free trade area and was confederal in nature. The EEC was always planned as a federation, with community law being supreme.

American readers will see the parallel with the issue – confederation or federation – which divided the USA in the 1850s and 60s. That issue had to be resolved by a civil war.

The claim on page 2 that the "we will keep our own border controls" is even more absurd. Free movement of labour was one of the founding 'principles' of the EEC. The key EEC Regulation was adopted as long ago as 1964.

If we vote to stay EU nationals will continue to be able to walk into this country. We can refuse to admit EU nationals, but only if the EU agrees.

The claim on page 4 that the EU is "by far the UK's biggest trading partner" is only true if you treat the EU member states as one, but the EU is not a state, not yet at any rate. The US is the UK's biggest trade partner. In the month of February the US purchased £3.5 billion of British products, with a surplus for the month in favour of the UK of £600 million.

The UK trades with other EU member states at a massive deficit. Taking February again (the most recent month for which official stats are available) the Germany's sold us £5.3 billion worth of goods and services. They bought just £2.8 billion worth from us. That's a huge £2.5 billion deficit, just with Germany, in just one month. We need to get those tariff barriers up against the EU states and fast.

Official figures show a staggering £23 billion deficit with the EU in the quarter ending on February 29th. Including cash transfers a whopping £107 billion walked out of the UK in the direction of the EU in 2014.

The propaganda claim, repeated in the leaflet, is that 44% of UK exports go to the EU. That figure however is a con. Over 20 years ago, a phenomenon known as 'The 'Rotterdam-Antwerp Effect', was uncovered.

In order to inflate the export figures to the EU all exports to the Rest of the World via the giant European container ports of Rotterdam and Antwerp are counted as exports to the Netherlands and Belgium respectively. As a rule of thumb you should discount the export figures for Holland and Belgium by two-thirds.

Thus the official export figures to the EU count exports to South Korea and China as exports to the EU! Under the official EU import figures the Netherlands should be a land of nodding donkeys, as officially Holland is a major producer of crude oil.

Then you have to factor in the Republic of Ireland. The Irish need continued access to the UK market, including our job market.

Hundreds of thousands of Irish Citizens are employed in the UK in trades for which they would never get a work permit. The true ratio for UK exports to the European members of the EU (i.e. not including Ireland, which is in the British Isles) is probably around one-third.

In a major boo-boo the government have also recycled the discredited claim on page 5 that "over 3 million UK jobs are linked to exports to the EU". Under this formula every job at Jaguar LandRover is dependent on EU membership. In reality import substitution is going to create hundreds of thousands of quality jobs in the UK after Brexit.

On the next page the government run the scare story that Brexit would led to higher consumer prices. Rubbish. Leaving the Common Agricultural Policy alone would see substantial reductions in the cost of food.

The claim on page 10 that being in the EU makes us safer went up in smoke, along with a bit of Brussels Schiphol Airport, on March 22nd.

All the indications are that the leaflet has backfired. It has led to deeper acrimony inside the Tory Party.

The City already appears to be factoring in Brexit and will continue to prosper in or out of the EU.

BOOK REVIEWS

Derek Stirling

Why the UK/EU merger will fail

With a forward by Thomas Kremer an international businessman and inventor with a wealth of knowledge about international trade especially within the EU helps greatly support the thrust of this book that the UK should leave the EU.

In this book Daniel Hannan MEP, being at the heart of the EU explains clearly and precisely the original reasons that individual countries joined and how the term and the idea of nationalism is seen by the EU as a threat and not a bonus.

He goes on to show why the EU cannot be and does not want to be a democratic organisation. The euro is not forgotten, and its disastrous effects are covered in detail with the reasoning behind its formation and continuation regardless of the problems caused to the weaker members of the eurozone is explained.

Hannan then describes how the EU uses and helps lobby groups in order to give it the reasons for establishing further powers and control over its subjects without giving them any chance to prevent this process, while giving it the pretence that the citizens have requested such action.

Alternatives to the EU membership are discussed in great detail followed by his conclusion that we should leave the EU. The reasons he uses are many and varied but the future outside the EU straitjacket for the UK appears both positive and necessary if the UK wishes to prosper in the world as it really is.

Interestingly though, he does not include the immigration problems that are besetting the EU in its current form or for that matter the future rules and regulations that will be applied to the UK within the powers of the existing treaties should it remain within the EU.

After reading this book it is hard to see why the UK would wish to remain a member of the EU.

A reason to be afraid

This book details the reasons behind the rise of the far right radical groups throughout Europe.

By examining the increase in nationalism as the process of political mobilisation this book tries to explain the side-effect that the formation of the EU has unwisely created. The term nationalism and cultural differences appear to be inter-changeable in this publication.

A comparison between Eastern and Western Europe show up a number of important differences and how support for the radical far right has remained surprisingly low in Eastern Europe since 1991, and that support for the EU is decreasing in those countries. Meaning that further integration into EU politics may cause a move to the right, implying that the EU is not a liberalising force but rather pushes otherwise tolerant countries towards a radical right wing backlash.

A surprising result appears to show that economic and political factors, such as GDP, unemployment and electoral system types, do not explain variation in electoral support for radical right parties across countries.

The author then goes on to the subject of how the mobilisation works through social networking especially amongst the young.

Evidence also shows that Europeans are becoming less convinced that the EU is good for countries and that these trends could threaten European unity in the years to come.

The theory that European economic integration has been coupled with cultural disintegration, brings into question the assumption of the European project that community can be integrated through the economy. Yet, despite the drop in public support for the EU, economic integration has only accelerated. This may well cause a further rise for the far right parties.

Meanwhile the EU sees the euro as more than just a currency, but as “a symbol of European identity”.

American intervention

Dear Sir,

It is sad to see that the US President Barack Obama, considered to be the most powerful man on earth is so out of touch with reality.

He has obviously been advised that the UK has some sort of influence over the direction and potential of the EU institution.

Time for him to get properly informed advisers to explain to him that the UK has little if any influence over the EU and that in fact it is the EU that controls the UK not the other way around.

Furthermore he says that the US prefers to deal with blocs than individual countries, following that logic he should be helping Russia get back its USSR. So much for joined up thinking.

SIMON DOWER

The truth about trade with America

Dear Sir,

The response by the various groups opposed to EU Membership to the interference by USA President Obama was very disappointing. Obama stated that the UK would be at the end of the queue for a Trade Agreement with the USA if it were not in the EU. This gave the impression to many electors and indeed commentators who should have known better that a non EU United Kingdom would have trade problems and perhaps the loss of jobs.

It should have been stressed that the UK and the USA already have a healthy trading relationship without any trade agreement. In 2015 the UK exported £95.1 billion to the USA and imported £59.7 billion. This was achieved with no trade agreement and because both countries are members of the World Trade Organisation. The same trading relationship would continue if the UK were not within the EU irrespective of any trade agreement and Obama's ill informed comments about an imaginary queue.

Stability

Dear Sir,

We are constantly being told that all countries need stability and prosperity.

How can the UK obtain any of these goals while inside the EU?

The constant barrage of new rules and regulation imposed on UK citizens by the masters in Brussels will continue to create an unstable UK with little control over its destiny and prosperity. Will this result in a politically unstable country with no form of democratic electoral change possible?

If so, then the sooner we leave the EU and can get back to a democratic system of government by the people for the people the better.

Presently with the Labour-Liberal-Conservative parties united on removing democracy, the future looks very bleak.

SALLY EVANS

Government savings

Dear Sir,

Having read recently about the refurbish required of Big Ben and the Houses of Parliament, I have an economic solution.

If after the 23rd June we vote to stay in the EU, then the Houses of Parliament will be redundant as the EU Parliament will in future be our direct government. Therefore, we can sell the Houses of Parliament and use some of the proceeds to pay for the refurbishment of Big Ben and the rest we can put towards our subsidy of the EU. Then extra savings can be made by scrapping the MPs and allowing the country to be run by the MEPs, it makes perfect economic sense and fits in to the future that our pro-EU government have asked for.

Furthermore, we will save the cost of General Elections.

Cameron and Bureaucracy

Dear Sir,

The Prime Minister David Cameron is currently fighting a battle in the UK Parliament regarding his drive towards converting all schools into Academies.

His reasoning is that you cannot trust BUREAUCRATS with the running of our schools in the best interest of our children's education.

Can anyone explain to me why then following the same logic he is so convinced that only BUREAUCRATS acting on behalf of the EU in Brussels should run the UK and decide upon the future interests of the citizens of the United Kingdom?

ROY SMYTH
Durham

EU and child safety

Dear Sir,

Many MPs and those worried about child safety are telling us that we should accept 3,000 unaccompanied child migrants currently held in camps in the EU.

The reason given is that these children are not safe in the EU as it has been suggested that many have fallen pray to child abusers of one form or another.

If the EU is so dangerous for these children, the question that should be raised is why does the UK wish to remain a member of such an organisation that permits such atrocities? Instead, we are being told by our main stream politicians that this is the only future available for the UK and we should accept it.

That is not the future organisation that I wish to be associated with.
