

A call for action

J. Brian Heywood

In recent years the British people have become increasingly aware that our parliamentary system is a long way from being completely democratic. The main reason for this awareness is that the party's in Westminster have a 'Whip' to ensure that MP's can be forced to vote according to the wishes of the elite. In recent times some evidence has emerged that despite the Whip's power, almost one third of MP's will in most cases vote in favour of what they think is best for the people. But, the majority are career politicians who will do as they are told to ensure a prosperous future for themselves. This is clearly illustrated by parliament's refusal to pay elderly Equitable Life sufferers the pensions that they have lost, even though the Government accepts that it was responsible for their loss. As the whip system operates in other western countries, it is difficult to see how it could be abolished in the UK, but it's power could be seriously reduced.

The elite have been able to get away for decades with decisions that cause difficulty for the working people and future generations. In the 1950's a significant number of the world's largest companies were British owned. All of them have been taken over without our Government trying to interfere. All other western countries have done their best and largely succeeded in preventing such takeovers.

But, why would our Government allow this to happen? Well, one reason is that the elite benefit from the money that flows in from the sales, because these sales make the economy look better for a short period of time and therefore protects their time in power. It may be that they believed that future generations would defy the odds and create new giant companies. That has not happened, our start up companies are still falling into foreign hands.

Why have our citizens allowed this to happen? Clearly, it's because until recently, the only way individuals have been able to complain is by contacting the media. The BBC, ITV and most of the newspapers get such complaints on a very regular basis, but only rarely do they get aired or printed. Could it be that significant elements in the media elite have financial reasons for maintaining the Status Quo?

Some of the political elite must have been benefiting from special payments ever since our parliament was created, but it clearly became almost the norm in the 1960's when the UK was considering joining what became the EU. Just imagine that at that time you were an elite in the Common Market and you needed large sums of money to expand your new club and maintain your position. Supposing you contacted key people in the UK and said, "Look I know that the majority of your people don't want to join our club, but if you can push it through I can arrange it so that you get a million pounds or so from Brussels. You will, that's excellent, but to get it going your country will have to pay billions of pounds of extra money to us, on a regular basis. Yes, OK, I admit it is more that existing members pay but it is necessary to get this deal accepted. Does such a deal interest you? That's fine, I will be in touch".

Then you grab a million or so for yourself in return for your good work.

All of that is, of course, history and it does not suggest a way the British people can solve the horrendous mess we are in. Most activists argue that the populist movement indicates that the peoples aims are likely to be listened to eventually, but then add that sadly it will be too late for the citizens of the UK.

Dozens of action groups have done their best to get their messages over to the masses during the last few decades and have done so by creating websites. But, almost all of these have disappeared, largely because readers may have agreed with the claims being made but they could not see how they could help by making contact.

There is however, an opportunity, probably the only one, to get the wishes of the British people heard. The populist movements around the world are the result of the incredible growth of social media. However, social media is mainly about individuals contacting people on subjects they are interested in. So, it is not surprising that politics forms only a small part of the chatting that goes on.

The key political parties in the UK have set up sites across almost all the social media networks, but their success is limited because very few people will want to give an indication that they are chatting on behalf of a political party, because that could be seen to affect other issues they want to raise.

Any group that is not part of a political organisation and is formed to promote a single issue will have a big advantage over the politicians.

If a number of individuals were to form a group and promise to concentrate on just one or two issues, they should be able to gain support from people in all the political party's. For example, one group could be created dealing with Brexit and another one could concentrate on getting rid of the House of Lords.

Many of the anti EU activist groups don't support any particular party. Therefore, if a group of them got together and set up a number of social media sites stating that they are non political and just want comments from people on this subject, the result could be tremendous. But, greater help can be obtained from elsewhere. Groups like 38 Degrees and The Tax Payers Alliance, already get an enormous number of supporters. The 38 Degrees organisation claims to have over two million members. However, these organisations don't themselves challenge the political party's because they have people working on conflicting beliefs, e.g., both for and against Brexit.

So, if even a medium sized group of activists were to get together and form a body trying to remove, for example, the House of Lords, and they promised that was all they were dealing with, they should be able to gain massive support from social media members of groups like 38 Degrees.

Another way of understanding the situation is this. If we think of our Government as a massive rugby team, we are attempting to play them with a lot of individual players who just don't know how to pass the ball to each other. Looking back at what is happening on social media would suggest that if we do combine then the Government would have to seriously consider the people's views.

Creating such groups would not destroy the current political party's, it would just force them to accept the wishes of the majority.

I do hope that there are British citizens willing and able to form such action groups.

The reality of fishing

Why the fishing industry should not be given away again in order to satisfy our European Union competitors?

According to Save Britain's Fish, the UK has some of the richest fishing grounds in the world. Sacrificed to join the EU, they are automatically repatriated upon UK withdrawal and must not be bartered away once again.

Past and future

* The disastrous EU Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) of "Equal Access" means 75% of our nation's resources are in EU hands. The EU catches 60% of the fish in our Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ).

* 60% of the UK fleet has been scrapped due to this loss of resources. Employment's halved, communities and heritage have been destroyed. EU owned but UK registered Flagships own 50% of the UK fishing entitlements in England and 90% in Wales.

* This robbery of our resources means there's not a major fishing port left between Plymouth and Peterhead although the UK has some of the world's richest fishing grounds.

* Leaving the EU automatically repatriates all of Britain's greatest natural resources. Managed sustainably UK fishing could double to be worth £2 billion catch value and £8 billion net-to-plate value in addition to supporting thousands of ancillary industries and jobs.

* This can rejuvenate communities for generations with a British policy that environmentally and economically is fit for purpose that benefits and is inclusive of all fisherman.

Trapped in Transition

* The Transition means the governments capitulated to obeying all EU law after Brexit. The UK officially leaves the EU but one second later hands all control back to the EU.

* This isn't just a 21month delay - the Transition is a death sentence for what's left of Britain's fishing as we are trapped in the disastrous CFP with no say or veto.

* The EU can abolish the 12 mile limit that protects inshore and shell-fisherman and can change the EU relative stability quota share to claim more than the 60% they already catch in our waters.

* The EU can enforce detrimental laws to cull what's left of Britain's fleet, using international law (UNCLOS Article 62.2) to claim our resources we would no longer have a fleet to catch.

* The EU quota system forces fishermen to discard half their catch to find species their quota lets them keep. The 2019 EU discard ban addresses the discard symptom not the quota cause. In 2019 when a vessel exhausts its smallest quota it must stop fishing - this will bankrupt around 60% of the British fleet.

* The government's failure on an "acid test" squanders taking back control of a £8 billion industry and their weakness incites a poor final deal - British fishing has been betrayed a second time for nothing in return.

BOOK REVIEW

Derek Sterling

Are wars necessary?

In this short non-nonsense pamphlet Christopher Hoskin sets out a road map for future UK Foreign Policy decisions that could result in the prevention of military action.

He begins with the advantage of hindsight especially regarding the run-up to the First World War (WW1) and the resulting consequences. From there he details the background of much earlier conflicts that affected the decisions made by various countries that led them into war with their immediate neighbours.

The 1904 decision to sign the Entente Cordial with France - France already had an alliance with Russia - is referred to as a bad decision. He reminds us of the excited visit by Lloyd George on the day of the signing to Lord Rosebury, when Rosebury replied, "You are wrong. It means war with Germany in the end".

Furthermore, we are reminded that unlike other major European countries the UK has not been invaded by anybody after 1066.

The aftermath of WW1 and the possibility of avoiding WW2 is discussed in detail with a suggestion that had German been treated differently after WW1 a better outcome for all could have resulted..

Hoskin's then goes into the psychological effect of war on politics and the multitude of reasons that politicians have used to go to war with other countries whose regimes or politics they have disliked. The main arguments he highlights are the lack of a failure to sufficiently consider the consequences of our actions and the real interests of the UK as a country.

He reminds us that one reason often given for Britain's involvement in European affairs, is to preserve the balance of power and to prevent a single power being supreme on the Continent.

On a positive note, praise is given to Prime Minister Harold Wilson for his refusal to send British troops to Vietnam in support of the Americans.

EU Court of Auditors report

The 41st EU Court of Auditors report (348 pages) on the implementation of the EU budget, covers the 2017 financial Year.

In their opinion, the consolidated accounts of the EU for the year ending 31st December 2017 present, in all material respects, the EU financial position as of 31st December 2017. The results of its operations, its cash flow and the change in its net assets for the year ended, in accordance with the Financial Regulation and with accounting rules based on internationally accepted accounting standards for the public sector.

It has estimated the level of 'irregularities' in EU spending continued to decrease in 2017 to 2.4 per cent, down from 3.1 per cent in 2016 and 3.8 per cent in 2015, the European Court of Auditors said in its annual report published on 3rd October.

[i.e. 2.4 per cent of the money spent was not accounted for].

It went on to point out that problems remained in particular in rural development and cohesion. The European Union spent €137.4bn in 2017, or around €270 for every citizen.

The EU balance sheet includes a liability for pension and other employee benefits amounting to 73.6 billion euros at the end of 2017. This is one of the most significant liabilities in the balance sheet, accounting for almost a third of the total 2017 liabilities of 236.5 billion euros.

According to the report additional challenges for the EU budget arise from the announced, withdrawal of the UK from in the EU in 2019 and the need for improved accountability in light of the current reflection on the future of the EU budget.

The provisions relating to the financial settlement have been stipulated in a in a draft agreement on the UK's departure. Based on the draft agreement, the UK would honour its commitments until 2020 as if it were a Member State. After 2020, it would honour liabilities assumed until the end of 2020. For contingent liabilities related to financial operations decided or approved up the withdrawal date.

Special report No 17/2017 - 'The Commission's intervention in the Greek financial crisis'. In this special report, we concluded that the economic adjustment programmes agreed for Greece in the wake of the financial crisis had provided short-term financial stability, and made some progress on reform possible. But the programmes had only helped Greece to recover to a limited extent. As of mid-2017, they had not succeeded in restoring the country's ability to finance its needs on the markets. We were unable to report on the European Central Bank's role, as it questioned our mandate and failed to provide us with sufficient audit evidence.

IMF errors over Brexit

IMF (again) makes a fool of itself over Brexit by Rodney Atkinson

An analysis of the record of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in its understanding of the British economy.

“Joining that merry band of doom mongers (HM Treasury, the Bank of England and Chancellor Hammond) the IMF’s Christine Lagarde has again warned of ‘substantial costs’ of a no deal Brexit. In fact of course there is no such thing as ‘no deal’ – we simply go to the World Trade Organisation (WTO) deal, like most of the world’s nations – saving on the way big duties on imports from the rest of the world on cars, food and clothing and saving 40 billion euros in contributions to the EU budget! - The Substantial Costs are in having a deal!

George Osborne-sponsored IMF Head Lagarde (who was found guilty by a French Court of negligence for failing to challenge a 400 million euro payout to a friend of French President Nicolas Sarkozy) has continued that organisation’s negligence and incompetence.

In 2012 it was pointed out – just as she was attacking Greeks for not paying tax – that she paid no tax on her £298,000 salary which if grossed up for proper tax would have been more than the President of the United States!

It was in April 2013 that the IMF’s Chief Economist attacked the UK’s deficit reduction programme and warned of ‘playing with fire’. The following year the UK’s growth rate was 2.9% and that economist had to apologise.

Lagarde said that leaving the EU would be a blow to the UK economy because, ‘Countries trade mainly with their neighbours’. But the USA, thousands of miles away, is the UK’s biggest export market! The UK has a consistent trade surplus with the USA and a consistent large deficit with the EU.

Lagarde further claimed that the UK was suffering from a lack of capital investment because of the threat of Brexit. But the overall picture is the opposite. There has been since January 2016 a 6% increase in UK Gross Fixed Capital Formation – from £81bn to £86bn.

When the IMF made a fool of itself in 2013-14 the UK was still showing far healthier growth than the stagnant EU. Today Lagarde says we are in trouble – after 20 years (since the euro was launched) of greatly outperforming the EU. That is why we have nearly 3 million EU ‘citizens’ working in the UK.

Even today the IMF has just increased its growth forecast for the UK from 1.4% to 1.5% and while we have just posted a 0.6% growth in the quarter to July the Eurozone growth rate was 0.3% which was the slowest growth rate since 2016 (when we voted to leave!) and the IMF says:

‘Forecasts for 2018 growth have been revised down for Germany and France after activity softened more than expected in the first quarter, and in Italy.’ - Corporatist Forecaster elites.

Once again a large State corporatist institution has made a fool of itself in its analysis and forecasting. It is a catching disease, but inevitable from those who have comfortable careers and salaries – whether they are proved right or wrong.

Outside in the real world the rest of us, acting in democratic markets and responsible to our fellow citizens, have to absorb the cost of their failures and get on with life. When we rise up and tell them that staying in the EU would be a disaster the supranational elitists can’t believe it – no wonder.

While mass unemployment and social collapse have characterised the EU for 20 years the scribblers have sailed on regardless in their unearned luxury!”

A fragmented EU

Italy’s populist government has come to an agreement over spending as it tries to ‘end poverty’ with its first budget.

The ruling Five Star and League parties said on 27th September that they had agreed to set the budget deficit at 2.4% of GDP.

They have also agreed to press ahead with a minimum income for the unemployed. These decisions go against the Brussels’ demand for Italy to rein in its debt.

The EU’s response has been to warn that the Italian people will end up worse off under the populist governments ambitious spending plans.

EU Economics Commissioner Perre Moscovici said plans setting the Italian budget deficit at 2.4% of GDP will only add to Italy’s £2 trillion debt.

Italy’s coalition government denies it is seeking conflict with Brussels and insists the debt will fall.

However, the budget announcement has sent tremors through the system.

Observance of law

As a former United States president Thomas Jefferson once said “A strict observance of the written law is doubtless one of the high virtues of a good citizen, but it is not the highest. The law of necessity, of self-preservation, of saving our country when in danger, are of high obligation.”

Brexit offers a real future

A speech by Lord Stoddart of Swindon at the Freedom Association's 'Have your say on Brexit' event at High Wycombe on the 4th August

I was never in favour of joining the EEC. My first speech against joining was made in Woolhampton, Berkshire, in 1962. I understood that the Treaty of Rome was not about trade but about 'Ever Closer Union', building a country called Europe. That's why I voted against the European Communities Bill in 1972 and why I subsequently voted against every further treaty handing more and more powers to the EU in one or other house of Parliament. We have been lied to by Governments of both major parties, first about joining the EEC and later about all the subsequent treaties.

The real issue at stake is 'Who governs Britain?'

Is it an elected Parliament sitting at Westminster, through tried and tested institutions built over centuries, or an unelected bureaucracy sitting in a foreign capital? I know the answer to that and so did 17,410,742 people who voted in the referendum on 23rd June 2016, when they voted, by a majority, to Leave. People were entitled to believe that that was it and that their Government would quickly implement their decision. However, it was not to be, and a horrified establishment has done its best to delay and sabotage the decision to leave and has set up an organisation largely supported by foreigners - Soros and others who do well out of the EU.

They have resuscitated Project Fear and have, by doing so, damaged our economy and undermined our negotiators' efforts to get a good deal. They have also stood truth on its head and insulted Brexit supporters as stupid, nationalistic, racist and unpatriotic. Britain's position has been damaged by the inordinate delay in negotiating a deal and by the attitude of supplication by the Government. The truth is that the United Kingdom holds all the best cards but seems loath to play them. For a start, we are a great country, with a long history of success at home and abroad. Without our resistance to motley dictators, Europe as it now exists would be quite different. The arguments about Brexit are mainly about trade, but the reality is that the prize of Brexit is self-government.

But what about trade?

In 2017, the UK exported £274 billion to the EU and imported £341 billion from the EU: a deficit of £67 billion. Since 1973 our total trade deficit with the EU is £408 billion. We have a trading surplus with the rest of the world, so it is clear that the EU countries will be the losers if the EU maintains its hostile attitude and the UK will do well trading through WTO rules and making its own trade deals with other countries.

Then there is the matter of financial contributions. Since we joined the EEC/EU we have made net contributions of £187 billion to the EU coffers and these contributions are on a rising trend. The rebate is under pressure and, without this, future contributions could be over £15 billion a year net. So, in sheer money terms, the EU is a big loser and the UK a big winner from Brexit, but there would be other benefits too because we would not be bound by EU regulations, many of which are absurd and do not suit this country.

So my message is that, outside the sclerotic, bureaucratic, corporate European Union, Britain would thrive and prosper and, together with a revived Commonwealth, would be a great force for good in the world.

Lord Stoddart of Swindon is an independent Labour peer and a council member of the Freedom Association.

European Arrest Warrant

Good news has been heard for all those who dislike the European Arrest Warrant (EAW) and consider it to be a threat to civil liberties. The EAW allows EU members to accuse people of crimes - that may not be illegal in their home country to be deported to the accusing country - without their home country being able to stop the deportation.

According to Michel Barnier the Brexit EU chief negotiator, the United Kingdom will be kicked out of the EAW after Brexit.

This he said, is because of the UK's desire to leave the EU's court and free movement scheme.

The warrant allows EU members to request the arrest and detention in other countries without extradition talks between them.

UK finances

The fear merchants got in wrong! As UK wages saw faster growth in the three months up to July, and they continued to outstrip prices.

Excluding bonuses, wages grew by 2.9% according to the Office for National Statistics (ONS), well above the inflation rate of 2.4%.

Unemployment continued to fall, dropping by 55,000 to 1.36 million, with the jobless rate remaining at 4%, its lowest level for over 40 years.

Meanwhile UK borrowing for the year to date is 30.5% lower at £17.8 billion.

Fake news

Dear Sir,

So MP's are producing a report on fake news!

How ironic is that bearing in mind that the Conservative, Labour, Liberal Democrats and their politicians have been lying to the British public for over 45 years about their mission to destroy the UK as an independent, democratic and sovereign nation by making the UK a vassal state of the EU!

Pro-Brexit Rally

Dear Sir,

I have recently attended a very interesting Brexit Rally organised by leavemeansleave.eu. This rally was well attended and very informative for all those like me who were wondering about the positive value of leaving the EU.

leavemeansleave.eu is a cross-party campaign for a clean, swift exit from the European Union and is carrying out a number of rallies and meetings across the UK.

The organisation says the Rally is a response to two years of delays to the Brexit process, and that they are restarting the Leave campaign to ensure the British people get what they voted for in June 2016. The chairman is John Longworth, Vice Chairmen are Richard Tice and Nigel Farage MEP.

A number of meetings around the country have already taken place and more are to be announced. I strongly recommend attending one.

Referendum game

Dear Sir,

Yet again we see how politicians and many wealthy business operators wish to ignore the democratic referendum result of the British people.

The people voted to leave the EU but instead of getting on with it those who wish to remain subjects of the EU with all its implications are trying to ride roughshod over the people's June 2016 referendum result. As for suggesting that the people did not understand what they were voting for could equally be applied to General Election results, but we do not hear a call for another immediate Election when the vote does not suit a particular party.

Should a second referendum take place then the greatest loser will be that of democracy itself.

How many referendums do you need before the result is accepted?

SILVIA AXTELL

People's Vote

Dear Sir,

The people have voted a second vote is therefore unnecessary. The idea that a second vote will be a people's vote just ignores the people's vote we have already had.

Clearly our politicians are acting just like the EU officials act, if they don't like the outcome, then they just keep repeating the question until they get the result they wish. Voters are expected to get bored or just give in to the dictatorial powers of the elite.

Time to leave is now!

The EU's ambitions

Dear Sir,

For all those who believe that remaining inside the EU is the only future that they wish, perhaps they should realise what the ambitions for the EU actually are.

The EU is a politically driven organisation that wishes to be a force in the world in terms of global power, both military and financial. In order to do that it must become a country with a single voice, leadership, currency, army, economic policy, taxation system. That eventually means a collector and distributor of taxes throughout its new found empire. Furthermore, it means power stays in the hands of those unelected officials with no place for the citizens to have any truly democratic rights or control of its direction and leadership.

If that is your vision of the future that you wish, to be a slave of the EU, then please go ahead without me and all those who believe in democracy. The right to select your own political party whose goals you believe in is the right of every citizen of the UK and should not be given away to the EU system of government.

RICHARD EVANS

Employment

Dear Sir,

Surely the UK requires workers from across the world that provide a service, skilled or unskilled needed by the UK regardless of what country they come from.

No country should be given a preference when it comes to giving out jobs in the UK.

When entering the UK these workers could be given a five year work permit that allows them to stay in the UK provided they maintain a job. As state benefits they should be withheld until the five year term is completed, then they can become UK citizens if they wish to remain - provided they conform to the citizenship requirements - or extend the life of the work permit for a further number of years.
